Teachers recognize and respect the fact that students are different and these differences are generally good things. Teachers play a number of roles in the classroom yet, valuing diversity is one of the most important ones. Here is a list of environments created where each student feels valued and respected.

- Take the time to learn students Background, Interest and Learning style.
- Create an environment that is conducive for the students to understand others and gain an appreciation for the diversity they bring to the classroom.
- Teach students that everyone has strengths and weaknesses. When working in teams, students are encouraged to take advantage of the strengths of the team members to produce the best possible results.
- Invite Guest speakers from different places to share their Knowledge and Experience with students.
- To create a certain level of awareness regarding environment protection not only among the students but also among the community.

The atmosphere in the classroom reflects the importance of the work undertaken by both students and faculty members. A classroom with a strong culture for learning is characterized by high cognitive energy. There are high expectations from all students and the classroom is a place where the teacher and students value learning and hard work. For weak students, remedial classes are arranged to improve their performance. Mentors are allocated to the students to give counselling in their Academic, Personal problems to create a fearless environment.

3. Ethical Values and Integrity:
